RESUME GUIDE

---

Introduction

A resume is typically your first contact with a potential employer. It shows your life experiences and your accomplishments. Because employers consider your resume an example of your work product, it must be concise, accurate, error-free, well-organized, clear, and visually appealing.

Remember that the reader of your resume will probably spend less than one minute reviewing it. To be effective, it must be brief while still offering enough information to grab the employer's interest.

A resume is a formal timeline of your past educational and professional experiences and skill sets. It should highlight your strengths and background in a way that will convince a prospective employer to take a closer look at you. For this reason, you will want to compile one early in your law school career and continually update it as you establish academic and relevant experience. Use the samples in Appendix A as a guide.

Basic Resume Guidelines

There is no single way to set up a resume. However, there are some general rules you should keep in mind:

- Be honest. A lawyer's word is their reputation. Never include false information on any document. If you include class rank and/or GPA, use precise numbers and do not round up. Employers may call the law school to verify.
- Most law student resumes will be one page long. However, if you have extensive or diverse education and experiences, then your resume may be longer.
- Standard margins are one inch on all sides. You may have to decrease margins in order to make the resume fit on one page, though margins should be no smaller than 0.5 inches. Remember a resume should be aesthetically pleasing.
- Use a standard font, such as Times New Roman, Arial, or Cambria. These are simple, professional, and most traditional.
- Font size should not exceed 12 point, and should not be smaller than 11 point.
- Justify the text in the descriptions of each experience.
- Use action verbs to describe your legal experience. Do not start an experience description with "worked" or "responsible for...". Use Appendix B for sample verbs.
- Be sure to check spelling, grammar, and punctuation. Beyond spelling, grammar, and punctuation, consider capitalization and formatting.
- Proofread, proofread, proofread. Do not give potential employers any excuse to think your work product is less than perfect. Students are encouraged to review their resume with a Career Development Counselor before sending it to an employer.

The Heading

The heading should contain your basic contact information. It should be placed at the top of your resume. Your heading should include your name, address, telephone, and email. Your telephone number should be one where an employer may reach you or leave a message. Your voicemail greeting should be conservative, professional, and identify you by name. Also, be sure your email address is appropriate.

If you are looking for employment locally, it is recommended that you list only your local address. However, if you plan an out-of-state job search and have a permanent address in the geographic area where you are applying, you should list both your current address and your permanent address on the resume.

The Education Section

Degrees

The education section should be the first section of your resume. List your degrees in reverse chronological order, with St. Thomas University School of Law first. The name of the institution (St. Thomas University School of Law) should be followed by the city and state (Miami Gardens, FL) of the institution. Underneath your law school name, you should indicate the degree you are pursuing (Juris Doctor) and date of graduation (Juris Doctor Candidate, May 2019, or Candidate for Juris Doctor, May 2019).

Use the same format for your undergraduate institution, and other higher education institutions. Be sure to include the name of the institution, the city and state of the institution, followed by the degree received and month and year of graduation. If you studied abroad a semester or year, include the relevant details. Do not include high school education on your resume.

Grade Point Average and Class Rank

Whether or not to include your GPA on your resume is a personal decision. However, be aware that some employers may assume your grades are poor if you do not include them. Generally, if your GPA is a B average (3.0 or above), you should consider including it on your resume. If you decide to include your GPA and class rank, they must be the current values provided to you by the Registrar's Office. Rounding up your GPA and/or recalculating your class rank is not acceptable. Since our institution operates on a mandatory grading curve, the Office for Career Development can provide an explanation letter with your resume GPA at your request.

If you include your GPA and class rank on your resume, you should list your exact GPA and provide your class rank in parentheses. For example: GPA: 3.042, Class Rank: Top 20% (46/230). Finally, if you choose not to include your law school GPA and class rank, you should not include your undergraduate GPA.

Honors and Activities

If you have honors and activities related to your law school and undergraduate education, list them immediately below each school, degree, and grade information. Honors go directly under the school, degree, and grade information, if any. Activities go directly under honors.

Academic honors, such as cum laude, should follow the degree, and be lowercase and italicized. When listing information about honors and activities, list each item in order of importance. Honors include Law Reviews (with the title italicized), Moot Court Boards, Dean's List, and Scholarships. Each semester that you achieved Dean's List status should be clearly listed or you may indicate Dean's List with the notation "all semesters". Activities include student organization memberships and other elected offices.

Be sure to name the honor or activity and include your position, if you hold one followed by the years held, i.e. St. Thomas Law Review, Student Articles Editor (2015 – Present).

The Experience Section

The experience section includes relevant activity which may not be only paid employment, but also include volunteer internships and other positions of responsibility. This section should be presented in reverse chronological order, with the most recent experience first. Full-time, part-time, legal and non-legal experience should be listed in this section. You may choose to include work performed as part of your academic career in your experience section, including clinical experience, research for a professor, and pro bono work.

Keep this section consistent with the education section above. List the name of the firm or organization in the same manner you listed the names of your educational institutions. To the right of the name, list the city and state in which the organization is located. Underneath the name of the organization, list your title and the dates you worked there. Below your title, use paragraph format to describe your responsibilities briefly. Use action verbs as much as possible to describe your accomplishments. Avoid the phrase "responsibilities included" and the word "duties...". Use Appendix B for sample action verbs.

The purpose of the description is to attract the employer's attention and cause the reader to ask further questions about your work. Try to include in your description those aspects of your job which were particularly noteworthy or interesting. When describing a non-legal experience, highlight the accomplishments which utilized skills that are transferable to a legal job. And when listing legal experience, make sure to include basic duties, areas of law you were exposed to, legal issues researched, skills developed, special projects or extra responsibilities, and training or certifications completed. Job descriptions should be written in the past tense unless you are currently employed at the position. Be sure to vary the action verbs and do not repeat phrases or sentences in job descriptions. Carefully review spelling and grammar. Then proofread the job descriptions again before finalizing.

The Skills, Interests, Languages, Publications, & Community Involvement Section

---

Following the experience section many students include a skills, interest, languages, publications, and/or community involvement section. Being an upstanding lawyer requires more than an education and experience. If you have special skills that enhance your marketability as a lawyer, you should list them. You may want to include proficiency in a language other than English, any publications, professional certifications or licenses, or significant community involvement/volunteer activities. You may also include personal interests/activities that are important to you, if you choose, which can also serve as a good ice breaker in an interview.

Skills and Interests

This section is used as a broad category for information that may help market you to the prospective employer. Many employers like to see interests, as they give some additional material for conversation and demonstrate your other dimensions. If you choose to include your computer or online legal research skills, this is where you will do so. However, if you are short on space or beyond the first year of law school, it is not necessary to include these types of skills. Most employers will assume that you are capable of using LexisNexis, Westlaw, Microsoft Office, and Windows/macOS.

Languages

When listing a language, you should indicate your precise knowledge of the language on your resume. If you are truly fluent in a language, you should be able to read and write that language completely, with no regard to topic. If you are proficient, you are a bit less than fluent, but still very capable. If you are conversational, you are indicating to an employer that you can get by using the language, but you have areas where you may lack the ability to write or translate it. A working knowledge of the language means you are between rudimentary and proficient. Remember that your interviewer may speak the language you listed, so be prepared to conduct a portion of your interview in any language identified on your resume.

Publications

If, as a result of your educational or work experience, you have published an article, book or other writing product, include it on your resume. Since the practice of law requires solid writing skills, evidence that you write well is invaluable. Make sure the citation is in proper Bluebook format.

Community Involvement

If you have been involved in any significant community service or volunteer work at an organization, you should include it in your resume. Depending on the extent of your involvement you may want to describe the duties you performed or simply list it with the name of the organization, the city and state, your title and the dates. This section is essential for students applying to public interest law employers.

Items Not to Include

---

The following is a list of information that should not be included on your resume: LSAT score, age, health, marital/family status, social security number, other personal statistics, and/or references.

References

While references should not be identified on your resume, you should always be prepared to provide them. Your references should be on a separate sheet of paper with your address, phone number, and email at the top of the page in the same format as your resume. List each reference with his/her title, company, address, phone number, and email. Contact your references before you list them, and ask their permission to be used as a reference. As a general rule, you should list legal employers, faculty members or someone who has knowledge of your professional and/or legal work. You should generally not use personal references, such as family or friends. The phrase "References Available Upon Request" is not necessary since it is already assumed as part of your application.

Only provide the number of references requested by the employer. If no specific number is requested, then provide three (3) references. Refer to Appendix C for a sample of a "References" page.
